SUDSY SOAP

"Golly, Porky, it sure was nice of you to invite Cicero over here to play in your sprinkler today," Petunia said one hot afternoon. "Our hose is broken or we wouldn't have bothered you."

"Oh, it's no b-bother at all," Porky assured her. "The only thing is, my new neighbor who moved into the house behind me is always complaining about something, so we'd better keep our voices down."

"Hey!" a gruff voice spoke from the back fence just then. "You'd better shut off that sprinkler! It's splashing water all over me while I'm trying to do my gardening."

"G-Gee, I'm sorry, Mr. Humph!" Porky said. "I'll move it away from the fence."

"So! You won't shut it off completely, huh?" Mr. Humph snorted. "I'll fix you!"

"Oh, dear!" Petunia moaned as Mr. Humph retreated into his yard. "Now we've caused a great deal of trouble for you."

"Oh, I don't think he means any harm," Porky said optimistically. "I think he's just plain lonely and acts gruff to cover up his true feelings."

Porky and Petunia moved the sprinkler and had a nice chat while watching Cicero playing happily in the water.

"I guess we'd better turn it off now," Porky said a half-hour later. "The lawn's covered with water. Let's have some lunch while we're waiting for it to run off."

Petunia helped Porky to fix a snack for the three of them, and, some time later, they all returned to the yard once again.

"G-Good grief!" Porky exclaimed with surprise. "The water's even deeper now!"

"Ha-ha-ha!" Mr. Humph snickered from the back fence. "I guess I must have left my garden hose running too long and the water ran down and flooded your yard. Too bad!"

"You old meanie!" Cicero spoke up heatedly. "I'll bet you did that on purpose!"

"Hush, Cicero!" Petunia warned. "You know better than to talk to grownups like that!"

"Now you listen to me," Mr. Humph said to Porky. "I'm going to the store now, but don't you try any tricks while I'm gone!"

Mr. Humph disappeared from the fence again, and, while he was gone, Porky and Petunia tried to figure out what they could do about the problem neighbor. Hitting upon a plan a few minutes later, they dashed off to get their other neighbors to help them.

When Mr. Humph returned from the store, he was surprised to hear shouts of laughter and gaiety coming from Porky's yard.

"What's going on over there!" he bellowed, looking over the fence.

"Hi, Mr. Humph!" Porky called gaily. "Come on over and join the party. My neighbors helped me bank up the yard so the water won't run off. Now we have a nice wading pool we can enjoy all summer long! I told them you supplied the water."

"Thanks, Mr. Humph. You sure are a swell neighbor!" one of the gang called.

"By Jiminy!" Mr. Humph gulped to himself. "I guess I'd better join them. They're all acting so nice and friendly towards me, the least I can do is be friendly in return!"

"I guess my hunch was right, Petunia," Porky said as they watched Mr. Humph disappear into his house to put on his bathing suit. "He must have been feeling very lonely and left out of things, but now something tells me he's going to turn into a nice neighbor, after all!"

WARNER BROS.

OUR HERO!
AND SO...
